3. ACS Committees of the Council and Board

The Council and Board of Directors each call upon committees to study and make recommendations on matters of basic and continuing importance to the Society. Two “Society Committees” report to both Board and Council in the areas of budget and finance and education. In addition, each body has several standing committees, that report and make recommendations to the parent body. The topic with which each committee deals is usually apparent from the name of the committee.

ACS committees serve as forums for comments and proposals regarding the conduct of present and future programs of the Society; all ACS members are urged to make their views known to committee members. Both the Council and the Board of Directors also provide for special or other committees for short-term studies or for the execution of specific assignments. Membership on these committees is not limited to councilors or directors, and terms of appointment are variable depending on the nature of the committee assignment.

In the listing that follows, a committee member’s local section affiliation immediately follows his or her name (division affiliation is given only if the member is a voting councilor or member from that division). The date in parentheses represents the conclusion of the committee term. If no date is given, committee members are appointed annually.

4. Local Section Officers

Although ACS is international in scope with members in nearly every country in the world, its principal efforts are directed to the service of chemical scientists in the United States.

One important means to this end is through local sections. Each of the 185 ACS local sections has an assigned territory, and each member residing within such an area belongs to that section unless other arrangements are requested. The section organization now is so comprehensive that nearly 99 percent of all members in the United States are in a section territory.

Local sections serve members by providing programs of activities beneficial to chemistry and the chemical profession. Sections help to implement national programs and serve as a means of effecting liaison between members and the governing bodies of the Society. Exchanges of ideas among sections may lead to solutions to common problems and improved programs and services.

The following directory listing is provided to assist and encourage communication among all units of the Society. Contact may be made through the appropriate local section officer. The ACS identification number and the officer change month are listed after the local section name.

5. Division Officers

ACS divisions provide a medium by which members with similar technical interests, regardless of geographical location, can be associated for the exchange of information in specific fields. These groups organize symposia and programs for the national meetings of the ACS and in many instances arrange special interim symposia and meetings of national and international interest and importance. Information on additional divisional activities and services may be obtained through correspondence with the appropriate division officer. The acronym and officer change month are listed after the technical division name.
